The role played by the return of ex-soldiers from the World War II. The war made the Africans to know the meaning of freedom and democracy. Also Africans ex-soldiers learned military techniques and become leaders because when they came back they were in the forefront in mobilizing their fellow Africans to fight for independence.

Formation of UNO. UNO forcing the colonizing powers to grant independence to African countries also UNO was against colonialism and all forms of colonial exploitation and supported Nationalist leaders for example J.K Nyerere was supported by UNO in struggle for independence in Tanganyika.

The rise of U.S.S.R as a super socialist power. This is because USSR started to support freedom movements in Africa through moral and material support in order to spread socialism also She supplied military training to African soldiers, armies and freedom fighters. This speeded up the national struggles in the colonies.

Emergence of U.S.A as a super capitalist power. USA forced the European powers to give freedom the Africans countries through Marshal Plan/open door policy. Also U.S.A supported Nationalistic struggles in African morally and materially to prevent the spread of communism in order to introduce neo-colonialism.

Role played by NAM (Non-Aligned Movement) and the Bandung Conference of 1955. The Bandung conference was attended by Egypt, Libya and Ethiopia from Africa. The conference declared colonialism must be ended in Africa because it was an evil. Therefore it called the colonizing power to grant independence to their colonies thing which created solidarity among the nationalistic movements.

The role played by Pan-Africanism movement. Pan-Africanism insisted on nationalism after the eradication of slave trade and slavery especially after 1945 were it advocated that "Africa was for Africans". The main people during that time who insisted in self-rule were William Du Bois and Marcus Garvey.

Introduction of French sugar plantations in Mauritius and Reunion Island.

The introduction of sugar plantations increased the demand of slaves as the sugar plantations needed large number of labours hence the French decided to come in East Africa to take slaves thing which led to expansion of slave trade in East in Africa.

Slaves were needed as porters.

Slaves were used to carrying goods such as ivory and gold from interior of Africa to the Coast. This was important for the ivory trade, especially to the American, Indian and British traders.

Portuguese plantation in Brazil.

In the first half of the 18thc, the Portuguese expanded their plantations in Brazil. As a result, their sources of slaves in West Africa and Mozambique was not enough, so they came to East Africa to obtain slaves thing which led to the expansion of slave trade in east Africa.

Slaves were in a great demand.

This is whereby slaves were in a great demand as a domestic workers and soldiers in the Muslims nations. The Quran prohibited Muslims from enslaving other Muslims. Therefore, the slaves had to come from non-Muslim regions such as the interior of East Africa thing which led to the expansion of slave trade.

Profitability of slave trade.

This also increased the expansion of slave trade in east Africa because many people who involved in the trade became very rich so this situation attracted many people to engage in slave trade thing which increased the demand of slaves in east Africa and then expansion of slave trade.

9. The question needs the student to provide six reasons for the British to use indirect rule in her colonies.

Distribution of marks in essay question.

Main body carries 12 marks whereby any clear explanation in each point carries 2 marks

Main body any clear explanation carries 2 marks

Any relevant conclusion carries 1 mark

British were few in number. This made the British to use indirect rule in her colonies because British did not have enough man power due to have many and vast colonies in different parts of the world. For instance, in 1900 it was reported that the British had only 42 British officials in Nigeria colony. This number was not sufficient to administer the whole colony.

A language barrier. The language problem between the British and the Africans forced the British to use indirect rule in Africa continent. Neither the British nor the Africans understood the language of the other. Hence in solving this problem British decided to use local chiefs who can talk with their fellow Africans and then they can received information from local African rulers and that is known as indirect rule.

To avoid African restances. After the British experienced most of the African resistances was caused by harsh and brutal treatment from the direct rule hence they decided to change and use indirect rule in her colonies. African resistances led to the costs as the British concerned in suppressing the resistance rather than to deal with their production activities. So indirect rule reduced African resistances as the Africans they cannot resist under their chiefs.

Indirect rule was economically cheap. The system of indirect rule was used by the British because it reduced the administrative costs. So fewer funds were set by the British government for the maintenance of the colonies. Also the system involved few numbers of Europeans official and the African traditional chiefs were demanded low salaries for their personal use hence this could made them to accumulate a lot of profits.

Physical barriers. This also is another reason to why the British decided to use indirect rule in Africa due to some areas are remote by poor infrastructure, presence of mountains, thick forests and dangerous animals in the colonial African. So all these forces the British to use indirect rule.

Availability of tropical diseases. The British feared much the tropical diseases such as malaria and small pox because the diseases led to large number of whites to die. Therefore in escape with these tropical diseases the British decided to use indirect rule in order to avoid the tropical diseases.

The system ensured collection of taxes. Various kind of taxes was collected from the Africans as the chiefs used by the British to collect taxes from their fellow Africans .also the Africans chiefs they knew well their people so could became easy for them to collect taxes that why they decided to use indirect rule in her colonies.

10. The question needs the candidate to provide six effects of the First World War in Africa

Distribution of marks in essay question.

Main body carries 12 marks whereby any clear explanation in each point carries 2 marks

Any relevant conclusion carries 1 mark

It led to depopulation. The first world war of 1914-1918 led to the deaths of Africans who participated in the war for example it's said that more than 100,000 east African troops were killed.

It led to separation of families. Most of the African families were separated during the First World War because some members of the family were taken to fight on the side of their colonial master in the First World War which happened in 1914-1918.

It caused hunger and famine. Hunger and famine occurred due to the decline of production the war caused the decline of agricultural production because most of the people were concentrated on the war and not in agriculture activities which was the source of food.

Change of colonial master. After the end of first world war the Germany colonies was given to Britain hence this also changed administrative system from direct rule to indirect rule For example Tanganyika, Rwanda, Burundi, and Namibia was given to Britain.

Intensification of exploitation. First World War led to the increase of exploitation in Africa in order to compensate what they lost during the war. For example the Africans was highly exploited through hut tax, gun tax, matiti tax, poly tax, head tax ,dog tax, forced labor, land alienation, low wages and mineral extraction.

Spread of diseases The spread of diseases was caused by the return of ex-soldiers from the First World War. For example the spread of diseases like influenza, small pox, malaria, typhoid and others and all these caused the loss of African lives.

Great economic depression First World War led to the great economic depression which affected the African continent negatively because the depression victimized African economies leading to the fall of crop prices, increase of taxes, poor provision of social services and others.

Destruction of colonial economy production This was another effect of First World War in Africa whereby settler farms, plantation and mines were declined because labors were recruited as soldiers to fight in the First World War.
